REPLY MEMORANDUM IN FURTHER
SUPPORT OF DEFENDANTS'
MOTION TO DISMISS COMPLAINT
OR, IN THE ALTERNATIVE, FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Come now each of the named defendants in this action, individually and collectively and through their undersigned counsel, and submit this reply memorandum in further support of 25

1 their dispositive motion. This reply memorandum is filed
2 pursuant to Local Rule 7-2(c).<sup>1</sup>

3 In response to the defendants' motion, plaintiff argues that 4 he should be able to establish the viability of this action 5 through discovery, that Rule 12(b), F.R.Civ.P., requires the 6 Court to accept as true the well-pleaded allegations of the 7 complaint, that summary judgment is inappropriate because his 8 claim is based on the "state of mind" of the defendants, that 9 service by mail was effective service of process on the 10 individual defendants, and that none of the defendants is 11 entitled to dismissal based on absolute or qualified immunity.
12 Additionally, plaintiff asserts that he intends to file another 13 (second) amended complaint in order to "clarify" his claim under 14 the Federal Tort Claims Act, which he claims he may do as a 15 matter of right under Rule 15, F.R.Civ.P.

16 As discussed below, plaintiff's arguments are uniformly 17 unconvincing and should be rejected. This action should be 18 dismissed on multiple alternative grounds.

19 20 1. Rule 12(b)(1) Does Not Require the Court to Accept as True the Allegations of the Complaint

21 A substantial component of the defendants' motion is 22 directed to the Court's jurisdiction and thus is properly styled 23

24
25 <sup>1</sup> Plaintiff repeatedly refers to the "government's 26 motion" in his response. The subject motion is not the 27 "government's motion" but rather a motion brought by the individual defendants plaintiff elected to sue for money damages, as well as the institutional defendants named in the complaint.

1 a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1).<sup>2</sup> An issue
2 of subject matter jurisdiction is properly decided under Rule 3 12(b)(1). See McCarthy v. United States, 850 F.2d 558, 560 (9th 4 Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1052 (1989). A Rule 12(b)(1) 5 motion may be used to attack two different types of 6 jurisdictional defects. The first is the plaintiff's failure to 7 plead facts sufficient to show that the federal court has 8 jurisdiction over the subject matter of the case, a so-called 9 "facial" challenge to jurisdiction. The second defect that may 10 be challenged by a Rule 12(b)(1) motion is an actual lack of 11 jurisdiction over the subject matter, a so-called "factual"
12 challenge. Wright & Miller, § 1350, pp. 211-212; see also White 13 v. Lee, 227 F.3d 1214, 1242 (9th Cir. 2000). A Rule 12(b)(1) 14 motion may be intended as either a facial or a factual challenge 15 to the court's subject matter jurisdiction. See White v. Lee, 16 227 F.3d at 1242. In reviewing a facial attack, the court may 17 consider the allegations of the complaint, and documents 18 referenced or attached, in a light most favorable to the 19 plaintiff. See FDIC v. Nichols, 885 F.2d 633, 636 (9th Cir.
20 1989).

21 In reviewing a factual challenge, however, the court may 22 consider evidence outside the pleadings. See White v. Lee, 227
23 F.3d at 1242. In a factual attack, no presumptive truthfulness
24 attaches to the plaintiff's allegations. See id.; Augustine v.

26 <sup>2</sup> Some of the defendants also moved for dismissal under 27 Rule 12(b)(6), because there are no allegations made against them 28 in the complaint. See Defendants' Motion, pp. 26-27.

1 United States, 704 F.2d 1074, 1075, 1077 (9th Cir. 1983);
2 Mortensen v. First Federal Savings and Loan Association, 549 F.2d
3 884, 891 (3d Cir. 1977); accord, St. Clair v. City of Chico, 880
4 F.2d 199, 201 (9th Cir. 1989); Crowley Marine v. Fednav Ltd., 924
5 F.Supp. 1030, 1033 (E. D. Wash. 1995); see also Thornhill Pub. v.
6 General Telephone Electronics, 594 F.2d 730, 733 (9th Cir. 1979); 7 Timberlane Lumber v. Bank of America, 574 F.Supp. 1453, 1460-1461
8 (N.D. Cal. 1983). Unlike a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, a moving party 9 challenging the factual substance of the jurisdictional 10 allegations under Rule 12(b)(1) may use affidavits and other 11 matter outside of the pleadings. Wright & Miller, § 1350, p.
12 213. In ruling on a factual challenge in a motion to dismiss 13 under Rule 12(b)(1), the trial court "is not restricted to the 14 face of the pleadings, but may review any evidence, such as 15 affidavits and testimony, to resolve factual disputes concerning 16 the existence of jurisdiction." McCarthy v. United States, 850
17 F.2d at 560.

18 In the present case, the defendants provided declarations 19 and other materials in support of their contention that subject 20 matter jurisdiction is lacking. Those materials demonstrate 21 (among other things) that jurisdiction is lacking because the 22 individual defendants are immunized from liability claims such as 23 those being asserted by plaintiff.

24 Although the defendants assert that the appropriate legal 25 standard is that of a Rule 12(b)(1) motion to dismiss and that 26 the Court should make findings of fact, defendants nonetheless 27
28

1 moved in the alternative for summary judgment under Rule 56.
2 Pursuant to Rule 56, summary judgment should be granted where 3 there are no genuine issues of material fact and the moving party
4 is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. One of the important 5 goals of summary judgment is to avoid wasting resources and time
6 where a trial would be a mere formality. Zweig v. Hearst Corp., 7 521 F.2d 1129, 1135-36 (9th Cir. 1975). Whether the analysis is 8 conducted under Rule 12(b)(1) or under Rule 56, the result is the 9 same; namely, plaintiff's claims must be summarily rejected.

10 11 2. The Defendants Are Entitled to Dismissal Prior to 12 Discovery

13 Plaintiff argues that summary judgment is premature because 14 no discovery has been conducted. Plaintiff further argues that 15 discovery is needed because plaintiff's claim is based on the 16 "state of mind" of the individual defendants (most of whom have 17 never met plaintiff). Plaintiff's arguments are incompatible 18 with the Supreme Court's repeated admonitions that public 19 officials be spared the burden of unnecessary discovery through 20 rigorous application of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 21 particularly Rule 56.

22 In Crawford-El v. Britton, 118 S.Ct. 1584 (1998), the 23 Supreme Court characterized summary judgment motions as "the 24 ultimate screen to weed out truly insubstantial lawsuits prior to 25 trial." 118 S.Ct. at 1598. Moreover, as the Supreme Court has 26 repeatedly noted, one of the purposes of the qualified immunity 27 defense is to spare public officials the burden of unnecessary 28

1 discovery. Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 817 (1982);
2 Behrens v. Pelletier, 516 U.S. 299, 308 (1996).<sup>3</sup> Accordingly, 3 where the complaint alleges facts which, if proven, would amount 4 to a violation of clearly established law but the actions the 5 defendant actually took are different from those alleged, a 6 motion for summary judgment before discovery is appropriate.
7 Similarly, if the complaint leaves out significant facts which,
8 once supplied, entitle the defendant to immunity, then summary
9 judgment prior to discovery is appropriate. Anderson v.
10 Creighton, 483 U.S. 635, 646 n.6 (1987)

11 Plaintiff's suggestion that his claim is based on the "state 12 of mind" of (unspecified) defendants does not change the 13 analysis. In Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800 (1982), the 14 Supreme Court reformulated the common law qualified immunity 15 defense to ensure that it did not turn on a subjective enquiry 16 into the official's motives and good faith. See also Davis v.
17 Scherer, 468 U.S. 183, 191 (1984) (Harlow adopted "a wholly 18 objective standard"). The Harlow formulation, therefore, grants 19 immunity to an official where the law is unclear, whether or not 20 the defendant has a proper motive.

21 It is the defendants' view that the enquiry in the present 22 case need proceed no further. The law was not clear (and is 23 still not clear) whether a parole violation near the end of the 24

25 <sup>3</sup> Stated another way, the qualified immunity of public 26 officials is immunity from suit (and its attendant burdens), not 27 merely immunity from damages. Hunter v. Bryant, 502 U.S. 224, 227
(1991); Siegert v. Gilley, 500 U.S. 226, 232 (1991); Mitchell v.
Forsyth, 472 U.S. 511, 526 (1985).

1 parole term automatically tolls the parole period or whether the 2 parole can expire during the time a parolee is in violation 3 status. That contested legal issue eventually concluded with the 4 District Court's (in Arizona) determination that plaintiff had 5 been imprisoned too long. Such a determination, however, does 6 not automatically translate into a damages claim against those 7 individuals who reported plaintiff's parole violation, issued the 8 arrest warrant based on the parole violation, or supervised those 9 persons who performed those tasks. The "state of mind" of the 10 individual defendants is, therefore, wholly irrelevant.

11 In order to advance a claim based on "improper motive" or 12 "state of mind," the gravamen of the complaint must be a facially 13 lawful or proper action which is carried out because of an 14 invidious purpose; e.g., denial of discretionary benefits due to 15 class-based discrimination. Plaintiff's claim does not fit this 16 model because plaintiff alleges that the defendants' actual 17 conduct (the issuance of the warrant, etc.) was unlawful.
18 Moreover, even if plaintiff's complaint did fit the model of an 19 "improper motive" claim, it would necessarily fail because the 20 complaint does not allege sufficient facts to support such a 21 claim.

22 In Crawford-El v. Britton, 118 S.Ct. at 1596-97, the Supreme 23 Court approved the requirement that a complaint contain specific, 24 nonconclusory allegations of fact which, if proven, would 25 affirmatively establish the existence of the claimed unlawful 26 motive. The complaint in the present case is woefully deficient
27
28

1 in this regard because it does not even specify what actions were 2 taken by which defendant(s), much less specify what improper 3 motives (race based, class based, gender based, etc.) prompted
4 which defendant(s) to act in a certain manner. Even in well-pled
5 "improper motive" cases, the Supreme Court in Crawford-El 6 commanded that the trial court exercise its discretion to protect 7 the substance of the qualified immunity defense, so that 8 "officials are not subjected to unnecessary and burdensome 9 discovery or trial proceedings." Crawford-El, 118 S.Ct. at 1596.
10 More to the point, the Court (again) directed the district courts 11 to "resolve the threshold question [of immunity] before 12 permitting discovery." Id. at 1597.

13 Accordingly, plaintiff's suggestion that defendants' motion
14 for summary judgment is "premature" must be rejected.<sup>4</sup>

15
16 3. Service of Process Has Not Been Effectuated

17 Each of the seven individual defendants argued that they 18 have not been properly served with the summons and complaint. In 19 response, plaintiff states that he served four of the individual 20 defendants (Lowry, Foy, Collins, and Lawhead) by sending the 21 summons and complaint to the U.S. Probation Office in Arizona 22 (where none of them worked). Plaintiff has no response as to the 23 remaining three individual defendants.

26 <sup>4</sup> Plaintiff also states that he "intends" to bring a 27 motion under Rule 56(f). No such motion has been filed and so no 28 response will be made at this time regarding such a motion.

1 Plaintiff appears to concede that service was not proper as 2 to defendants Simpson, Bailey, and Ashcroft. The attempted 3 service on the four Nevada-based probation officers is obviously 4 not adequate for this court to obtain personal jurisdiction over 5 them.

7 4. The Defendants Are Entitled to Immunity

8 Although it is argued that the Court need not reach the 9 issue of qualified immunity as to most of the individual 10 defendants (because dismissal is appropriate on other grounds 11 such as absolute immunity, lack of specificity, etc.), it is 12 plain that all of the individual defendants are entitled to 13 judgment in their favor based on qualified immunity. In the 14 Ninth Circuit (as elsewhere), public officials are entitled to 15 qualified immunity unless their conduct was such that 16 no reasonable official situated as were the defendants could have 17 believed that the conduct was lawful in light of clearly 18 established law and the totality of circumstances. Alexander v.
19 County of Los Angeles, 64 F.3d 1315, 1319 (9th Cir. 1995). "The 20 question on qualified immunity is not whether [the defendants'] 21 judgment was mistaken, only whether a reasonable officer could 22 have made the judgment ... as these officers did in these 23 circumstances." Thompson v. Mahre, 110 F.3d 716, 723 (9th Cir.), 24 cert. denied, 118 S.Ct. 414 (1997).

25 The reporting of plaintiff's parole violation, the 26 processing of his arrest warrant, and his consequent 27
28

1 incarceration do not give rise to a claim for damages against the 2 individuals named in the complaint because a reasonable officer 3 in the position of the defendants could have believed that such 4 actions were lawful and appropriate.<sup>5</sup>

6 5. Plaintiff May Not File a Second Amended Complaint
7 Without Leave of Court and an FTCA Action Would Be Untimely

8 Plaintiff states in his opposition that he "is filing a 9 second amended complaint to clarify his Federal Tort Act claim."
10 See Opposition, p.3 n.1. Plaintiff further states that he need 11 not obtain leave of court for such a filing under Rule 15 because 12 the defendants' motion is not a "pleading" as that term is used 13 in Rule 15.

14 Plaintiff is correct that the defendants' motion is not a 15 "pleading" as that term is used in Rule 15. However, by the 16 plain terms of Rule 15, plaintiff may file an amended pleading as 17 a matter of right only once. See Rule 15(a), F.R.Civ.P.
18 Plaintiff has already filed a "first amended complaint" and must 19 obtain leave of court before filing another amended complaint.

20 The amended complaint which plaintiff proposes to file is 21 one to "clarify" an action against the United States under the 22 Federal Tort Claims Act (FTCA). Such an action would certainly 23 need to be "clarified" since the first amended complaint does not 24 even attempt to allege such a cause of action. Such an action

26 <sup>5</sup> In order to properly evaluate the defendants' qualified 27 immunity defense, it is essential that each defendants' conduct 28 be individually analyzed within the qualified immunity calculus.

1 would not be viable and would be subject to immediate dismissal
2 (and is subject to dismissal to the extent the current complaint 3 is imaginatively construed as alleging an FTCA claim) because 4 plaintiff did not file a timely administrative tort claim, a 5 jurisdictional prerequisite under the FTCA.

6 Plaintiff claims that he was falsely arrested, based on an 7 improper calculation of his parole status, in February 1998 and 8 was thereafter imprisoned unlawfully. See First Amended 9 Complaint, paras. 20-23. Plaintiff has attached to his 10 opposition memorandum (as exhibit B) two letters acknowledging 11 receipt of administrative tort claims submitted by plaintiff in 12 July 2001. Any FTCA action based on those administrative tort 13 claims would be barred because the claims are untimely.

14 There is a two-year limitations period for submission of the 15 required administrative claim under the FTCA. 28 USC, section 16 2401(b); Davis v. United States, 642 F.2d 328, 330 (9th Cir.
17 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 919 (1982). The date on which a 18 claim accrues is determined by federal law. Washington v. United 19 States, 769 F.2d 1436, 1438 (9th Cir. 1985). Here, the alleged 20 tort (false arrest) occurred in February 1998 and his damages
21 began to accumulate on that date. All of his alleged damages
22 arise from the single event (arrest) which occurred in February 23 1998. Accordingly, the administrative claims filed in July 2001 24 were untimely and can not provide the jurisdictional basis for an 25 FTCA cause of action.

1 Plaintiff may attempt to salvage his proposed FTCA claim by 2 arguing that he was subjected to a continuing tort which 3 effectively tolled the statute of limitations until he was 4 released from prison. Such an argument would fail. For a 5 continuing violation to be established, there must be a series of 6 tortious acts one or more of which falls within the limitations
7 period. Western Center for Journalism v. Cederquist, 235 F.3d
8 1153, 1157 (9th Cir. 2000). A continuing violation is occasioned 9 by continual unlawful acts rather than by the continual ill
10 effects from an original violation. Ward v. Caulk, 650 F.2d 1144
11 (9th Cir. 1981). Assuming that a tort was committed in February 12 1998 (or earlier) when plaintiff was arrested, the tort was 13 completed at that time and plaintiff was required to submit an 14 administrative claim within two years thereafter in order to 15 support a viable FTCA claim.

16 In Sandutch v. Muroski, 684 F.2d 252 (3rd Cir. 1982), the 17 Third Circuit rejected the notion that a continuing incarceration 18 was a continuing tort. In the absence of allegations of unlawful 19 acts while incarcerated, the continuing incarceration was simply 20 the continuing ill effects from the initial tortious conduct 21 which resulted in the incarceration. Id. at 254. The same result 22 was reached in Maslauskas v. United States, 583 F.Supp. 349
23 (D.Mass. 1984) (FTCA suit untimely based on negligence of Parole 24 Commission-incarceration was not continuing violation).

1        6. Conclusion

2        Based on the foregoing discussion and the arguments and 3 materials which accompanied the defendants' motion, this action
4 should be dismissed or, in the alternative, summary judgment 5 entered against plaintiff and in favor of each defendant.
